Dear Chris

My congratulations on you're graduation. You're mum tells me thatt you now a Batchelor of English. I hope you won't be embarassed, but I know how hard you have worked for the preceeding three years and how conciencious you have been.

It can be a hard existance being a student, but it is definately worth the effort. You've learned indispensible skills and are now in a privilged position in the job market.

Me and your uncle would like to take you for a meal to show you how proud we are.

With lots of love

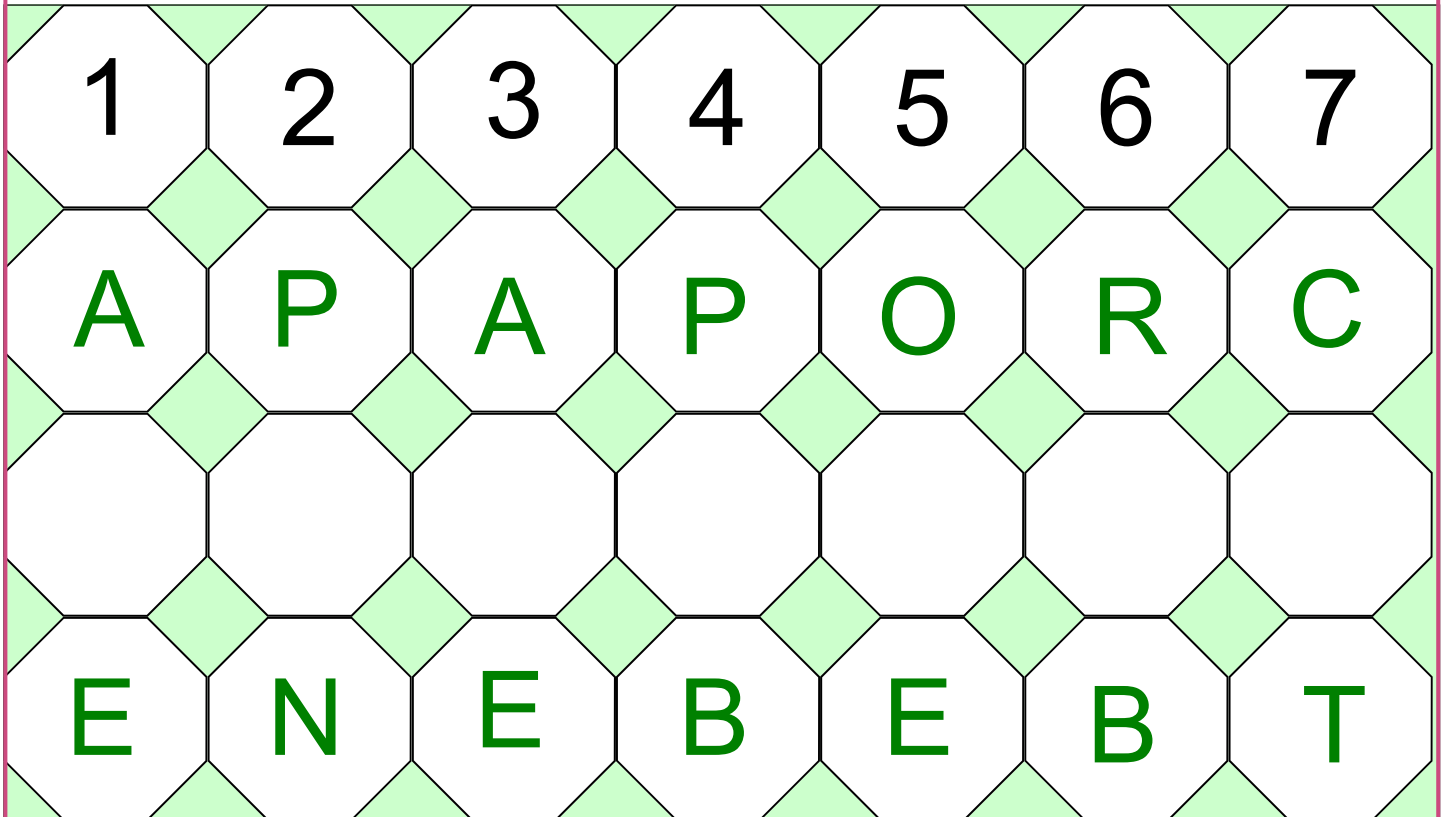

Ant Karen

A weary night had become the first day of the new milennuium. The Inspector reached across the table and snatched the notbook from her hands. It was full of notes written in miniscule handwriting - did it contain evidence of a dangerous liason. The suspect was a large bulky woman and the chair was scarcely large enough to acommodate her. At first it was hare to guauge her reaction. He studied the picture from the moniter. He thought she fits the identafication perfectly. And in the moment he glimpsed the wierd and amazing truth. 'Your withholding the truth from me' he said. Hed made the conection at last. 'Your harrassing me' she said. She became rigid all over, so much so that she didnt turn her head at the rythmic clanging of the bell.
